

True story from my time working at the Tim Hortons in Glencoe, Ontario
Yes I know no one gives a shit

Motivational factors

Are you the manager of a second-rate coffee shop in the middle of nowhere?
Does said coffee-shop always close at specific times of day because your drive-thru times are shit (4th worst in Ontario worst) and your employees don't give an F because they're overworked?
Rather than hiring more employees, because no one wants to work for you, here's how you can motivate your employees!

PUSH	PULL
Use external factors to motivate people Rewards or consequences - "Make the times less than 10 seconds or you're fired!" - "Make the times less than 10 seconds and you'll get a bonus!" - o Then just don't give them that bonus Manager makes use of their control	Creating an environment that pulls individuals towards a goal Basically making the work or end goal more enjoyable Aligning tasks with personal interests or strengths

"No certain answer" from my checklist means that this will likely be covered in a short -answer question that is subjective
